DEATH OF COMTE DE FALLOUX. The Comte de Falloux is dead.

We take the following sketch of the Corate do Fallong from "Mon of the Time" Falloux, Alfred Frédéric Pierre, Comte de, French politician, born 7th May, 1811, at Angers, is the son of a merchant, who, at the Restoration, received a patent of nobility as a reward for his zeal in the cause of the monarchy. The son showed by his two harliest works-Histories of Louis XVI, and of Pope St. Plus V.—published respectively in 181 and 1814, that he inherited the Legitimist principles of his family, and their ardeat love of the cause of order and religion. The department of Maine-et-Loire returned him is 1846 to the Chember of Deputies, where he became conspicuous by his zealous advocacy liberty of religious teaching. After the flight and abdication of King Louis Philippe, 1848, M. do Falloux was returned to the Constituent Assembly, and laboured there with an amount of zeal and political courage which extorted admiration even from his opponents He was one of the deputies who organized the resistance to the insurgents of the 15th of May, and on the 29th, being appointed reporter in the question of national workshops, he moved the dissolution of the Chamber, which was the signal for the uprising of the Red Republi cans in June. After the election of Louis Nupoleon as President of the Republic, M. de Falloux was appointed Minister of Public Instruction, 20th December, 1848, and held that post until the end of October, 1849, when he resigned in consequence of his being consured. for submitting to the Assembly an organic measure relating to education without having first brought it under the notice of the Council of State. Thereupon he took his place in the Legislative Assombly, to which he had been again returned by the department of Maine at-Loire, and, acting in concert with Montalembert, provoked the most violent recriminations from the Left. After the coup d'etat, withdrawing from the areas-of politics he occupied himself with agricultural brought very frequently under the notice Catholic Congress held at Mechlin in 1867. One of the principal minor industries of Hong. kong is the manufacture of Chinese hubble bubble pipes. These articles are as a rule made wages than being the brother of the thief. Gongs and cymbals are also made of sheathing metal by Chinese, and the great art in making appears to be much hammering. A mortice about five inches wide by three feet long is cut out of this piece of timber, leaving about one foot of wood entire at the bottom and top. The soles are placed in this mortice, and between each sole is a thin piece of plank; wedges are next driven in at the top until the soles judged to be sufficiently pressed; they are then removed from the press, and several layers sewn or pegged together with small wooden pegs. The use of leather has within the past few years much increased amongst the Chinese. The leather used by Chinese is exceedingly durable if well oiled and greased; but it will not bear ordinary European blacking, which seen dries, cracks, and breaks it. When used for soles it does not wear so well as English leather, unless protected by iron hobnails, or cleats, in which case, as when well greased, it shows less tendency to crack than European leather, and probably lasts longer.

> The manufacture of tobacco is another industry employing a large number of workmen in Hongkong: The leaves, after being wetted with. native molasses water, are placed between boards in a powerful wooden press, in which pressure is brought to bear by means of a long lever, hauled tant by a rope and wooden windlass; the stand- taliated by knocking the King's Own man down sheathing metal, had to be made by the far more ling part of the rope is made fast to astout smooth hardwood bar situated beneath the end of the lover. THE LOSS OF THE BRITISH SHIP "ST. ELMO."

officers, to present the following with a request for its publication. The circumstances in connection with the above loss are substantially as follows:-

The British ship St. Elmo, of St. John, N. I. 1.428 tons, under my command, was on a voyage from Cardiff for Manila, with a cargo of 2,323 tons of coals; and on the night in question was lying becalmed in the Ombai passage, about midway between Ombai and Timor, and heading per compass S.E. & E. The side lights had been trimmed, lighted, and sent out ninder my personal supervision at the usual time, which had always bein tay custom. At about 11 p.m. of November 27th, 1885, being the night above referred to, a bright light was seen rising above the horizon a little before the port beam and shortly after a green light came in view, proving these to be the lights of a steamer. The chief officer, whose watch it was, or, in other words, who had charge of the deck, thereupon called ms. I came up at once, and saw both side lights of the steamer coming head on, and bolisved sho was coming to speak us, having no doubt that the officer in charge of her would plainly see our port light, which had that moment been examined and found to be brightly burning. As she approached nearer. she shut in her port light, and then believed she had "starboarded," and would cross our bow to the southward; but on her still nearer approach, it appeared probable that she would run into the ship, as there was no Patna (New) ......$5662 apparent effort on the part of any one on board Benares (New) ..... 545 to 5461 of her to diminish her speed, or change her Benares (Old).......... 520 nom. side lights were visible, from the forecastle of the St. Elmo, though her port light was invi- On London .sible from the quarter deck. She was then from three to four of her own lengths away, as near as I could judge, when I hailed at the top of my voice "Steamer aboy," as did also the whole watch continually, those on board the steamer, however, taking no notice whatever until she was within less than our own ship's length of us. with still undiminished ON PARIS .speed, when we heard her tolograph bell (supposed for full spood astern) and the sudden dragging of her wheel chains, but it was then too On New YORK.sta, and she crashed into the ship about midway | Bank Bills, on demand between the port fore-rigging and cat-head, cutting her right through into the hold from the ON BOMBAY .top of the rail to far below the water line, and on a course which Capt. This then shows the steamer to have been coming on a line of one and one half points be- ON SHANGHALfore our beam, and on a line where our port-lightcould have been plainly seen. As soon as the steamer struck us, or within one minute, I run right to the port light, (giving orders as I did so to call all hands and lower away the starboard boat as I feared the lamp had been broken by the collision, or that the concussion had put if out, which, however, was not the case.

The steamer, which proved to be the Generati Pel, of Batavia, was then remaining with her bow sticking into our skip about 20 feet forward of our port light. Our port light by careful inspecting. I found to be brightly burning, and the red glass of it to be brightly reflected on the steamer's bow. My boatswain, W. H. Westcott, was with me and has testified to the truth of it Our starboard light, by personal inspection, 1 also found to be brightly burning, which, however, I did not consider just then to be an object of importance. I then ran aft and ordered the starboard boat to be put on, which was subsequently quickly done; the steamer in the meantime backing astern. When she atruck the ship, she naturally drove the ship's head around to the southward; and when backing astern naturally came back on our port haarter; and when she had backed sufficiently astern to be out of range of our port light. I received a bail from the steamer saying that I had no lights burning, which I denied most emphatically. I requested the Captain to remain near me and send his boats to my assistance, which he did in due course, though our second boat had here lowered away, when the first boat from the steamer arrived alongside, and into which boat I immediately jumped and went under our port bow to examine damages, finding the water pouring into the ship in a body, and that she had settled by the head about 18 inches, and that there was no possibility of saving the ship, as sho was cut through down to the turn of the bilge. This was from 15 to 20 minutes after the steamer struck the ship. I then went back on board and gave orders to pick up what effects could be saved and to make ready to leave the ship; the pumps having during this time been sounded twice, and 6 feet 6 inches and 8 feet of water found in the ship within ten minutes. The case therefore was a hopeless one. Regarding our sidelights which my worthy (P) opponent states were not burning, I ropest, they were burning brightly, had been harning brightly since they were lighted that evening, were harning when the steamer struck the ship, were burning immediately after she struck, were burning when the ship was abandoned, and the port light to both my own and Captain Von der Aam's knowledge was brightly barning after I arrived on board the steamer; though after I (the last person) left the ship, and the two empty boats from the steamer pulled round under the starboard bow, (and in reach of the starboard lamp,) I cannot say whether it continued to burn or not; nor does it matter as far as the case before us is concerned; but according to Captain Von der Aam's own statement our port light was seen from the steamer to be brightly burning after he had steamed round the skip and brought her port bow again in view; if so then he must admit that it had been burning just the same all the time; for there was no occasion for any one to interfere with it, nor does it appear likely that any one at a time like that, would be likely to do so. My worthy (?) opponent says though I then had a fair view of the whole port side of the vessel run-into, I did not see a single rad light thereon. Had he gone to the prow of the vessel as he states, he would have plainly seen our red light unless his eyes had been bandaged, closed, or eclipsed, or unless, like the Captain or officer who hailed me, he waited until so far astern as to be out of its range. He says-" Hardly had I fairly fallen asleep, when I heard a loud cry from in front." Captain Von der Aam distinctly stated to me more than once that at the time when the steamer's telegraph ball rang for "full speed astern." he and scribe were sitting aft. converging together; and "in less time than | set 23 it takes to write it, the steamer struck the ship"; so he must have dozed-off very quickly.

Another statement in his chapter of falsehoods is to the effect that owing to the darkness the. ship could not be seen in time to prevent the disaster! If such was the case I would ask how he could plainly see the hull of the steamer coming head on at a distance where the collision could have easily been avoided had any lookout at all been kept on board the steamer. The moon at the time of the collision was about 15 ° high; or above the clouds that usually hand about high lands in the Tropics, and was shining brightly; the atmosphere was clear, and objects easily discornible a long distance away; and under these circumstances, the hull and sails of a ship would give timely warning, even supposing, as our scribe asserts, that we had not a single light on either side; though I repart our lights were brightly burning on both sides. He was perfectly right when he stated the kindness of Captain Von der Aam towards myself and officers and crew. The crew grumbled a great deal, though I am not aware that there was any cause for it, and believe the captain did his utmost to make everyone as comfortable as lay in his power under the circumstances; and I for one shall not forget it. As regards the cool- A negget Capt. Von der Aam, I do not think there is any reason to doubt it. I found no occasion to be otherwise on board a sinking ship; and when my officers and crew were all in the boats ready to leave and urging me to follow, I leisurely walked about the poop, the ca-bin, &c., and took a last meenlight view of what had been my employment and my home for upwards of nine years. Then we abandoned the ship and pulled on board the Genera il Pel and after we had been on board about fifteen or twenty minutes the St. Elmo sank from view. The steamer shortly after proceeded on her way to Koepang, passing quantities of wreckage wester. from the ship. From Koeping the steamer pro-ceeded to Macassar, where all due arrangements were made with the Resident of the port for the maintenance and passage of myself, officers, and crew from Koepang to Sourabaya, at which latter port the steamer arrived on December 6th and the crew were turned over to the British Vice-Consul there. On the 11th December there was a Naval Court held at Sourabaya, consisting of Mr. A. J. Warren, British Vice-Consul, two other officials, returned to him, but the master's certificate was unfortunately lost with the ship.

THE CAFE CHANTANT.

The Paris correspondent of the Glob writes :-- M. Francisque Sarcey, who with M. Augusto Vitu shares the enviable position of foremost dramatic critic in France, is leading a desperate campaign against the Paris music-halls. He has not a good word to say for them. He would fain have them improved off the face of the earth, to be rehave their glass and smoke their cigarette, cigar, or pipe, but the idiotic and meaningless amusing vaudeville, or, to speak plain English, the farce interlarded with couplets. I do not mean to say that, these performers would not be startled; by a child being run over in the streets, to they would be unable to recite the scene either in verse or in prose, according to an author's idea. Still they elicit thundering appleuse from their audiences. Some years ago a celebrated prima donna told me that the most flattering tribute she had ever received in Paris was a lotter from an apprentice boy. Itread as follows: - "Madame, -I have saved 10fr. You may have them if you will fetch the money." If the lady had ever been in a

Room is there and then made for the male performers, who condescendingly mingle with the audience, and graciously M. Francisque Sarcey was too staid a manaccept the refreshments offered by their when he came to Paris from a provincial admirers. Very frequently they take a "wee university to have enjoyed any such scene, drappie" too much, and when they again And now he only sees the objectionable side ascend the small platform, half of which is of the present music halls, and wishes to occupied by a cottage-not a grand-piano, abolish them altogether. He will have a to intone a drinking song or a lugubrious difficult task. romance, they seem to recount a personal fact rather than a mere fantusy. The lady artists do not descend from their Olympian heights. In the provinces they remain seated in a semicircle in front of the audience; in Paris they retire into a corner—for there is no green-room-where they knit the modest woollen stocking and refresh themselves with gum cordial-supposed to be excellent for the voice--while waiting for their next turn, The company is generally composed of a tenor, a bass, a light soprano, a prima donna assolute, and an accompanyist. The latter's knotty, not over-clean fingers seem more fit to twist iron bars than to play the harp or piano. What the hands of the tenor are like few would be able to tell, for even in his most familiar moods be never doffs, his gloves -provided by the management. Having only a strictly limited allowance of these, he is very careful of them. When off the stage be wraps his cambric handkerchief round the right hand, wherewith he takes up his glass. When performing he keeps his hands as far removed from his body as possible, lest he should soil his gloves, Should be not immediately descend after his song, it is a sign that the bass is coming immediately after bim-with the same gloves, because the management supplies only one pair. They are bought to fit the tenor, and the bass morely curries them in his hand. He makes no scruple in appearing gloveless off the stage. An eminent singingmaster, an Italian, who was a celebrated tenor once, gave me the following explanation when I remarked upon the carelessness of the bass as distinguished from the vanity of the tenor. "Throughout the vocal profession, from the highest to the lowest, you will always find this," he said. "The baritone and the bass may be men of talent; the tenor is 'invariably an idiot." Coming from such an authority—a tenor himself—I was bound to believe. As for the ladies, it would require a second-hand wardrobe dealer with a considerable flow of elequence to describe their attire. Fortunately for these artists, French ladies, both of the monde and the demi-monde. become very corpulent after 30, so the poor singers are able to buy their cast-off clothes, and they fit them nicely. "They want a tenor at La Villette," he began. "How much?" asked a woe-begone individual, nearer fifty than forty, in a cracked voice. "Three france a night and a choucroute garnie at the end of the performance," came the answer. "He'll hurt himself," said the postulant Mario; "with three france!"
